RE Curriculum Map Overview

Intent of Religious Education

Barnet is one of the most religiously diverse Boroughs in England and Brookland Junior School has children from a variety of faith backgrounds or none. We have many members from Jewish and Christian traditions and also smaller groups from Muslim, Hindu and Buddhist ones. We value our diversity and our curriculum has been designed to match the context of our area. Our children and their families provide us with a rich resource and are welcome to talk about their faith and festivals as part of our curriculum. Brookland children enjoy celebrating our differences and learning about beliefs and traditions different from their own.

The pupils said in a whole school meeting, where pupils express their opinions:

'We accept any religion, practice equal opportunities and teach the importance of following the British values and diversity.'

We believe that RE contributes to inclusive education by giving all children the opportunity to express their unique experiences and, at the same time, focusing on human experiences common to all. The intent of Religious Education in the Agreed Syllabus is to enable students to explore and reflect on the nature of religion and fundamental questions of human experience through three golden threads of firstly belonging, secondly story, celebration and symbols and finally leaders, teachers and believing.

Religious Education should therefore help pupils to:

1. develop and extend knowledge and understanding of Christianity, other world faiths and ethical beliefs
2. develop an understanding of the influence of beliefs, values and traditions on individuals, communities and societies.
3. enhance and reflect on their own spiritual, moral, social and cultural development
4. grow in confidence in their own faith and respect those with a faith different from their own
5. develop a positive attitude to living in a religiously diverse society
6. develop the ability to make reasoned and informed judgements about religious and moral issue.

The curriculum has been planned through the Barnet Agreed Syllabus and in consultation with a SACRE lead consultant, the school refers to research and documentation from the NATRE organisation and knowledge of content and research is up dated through Borough subject specialist meetings.

The Implementation

The pupils at Brookland are proud of the variety of religions and learning experiences they have in RE:

During a Whole School meeting where pupils express their opinions, pupils said:

'We learn about a lot of religions and not just one. We are learning about different religions so we can understand them better. We are learning more specific things so we can link and compare. If you have two religions to compare we know more about them so there is more to compare. I understand a religion's backstory, I can compare their different stories.'

At Brookland Junior School, class teachers ensure children are offered a variety of experiences within their lessons, for example, to handle artefacts, examine photographs, explore special places through virtual visits, as well as opportunities to discuss religious ideas and beliefs so that RE is as stimulating and interesting as possible.

Pupils have the opportunity to visit a local place of worship each year to complement the learning in class. The church of St Jude's, a local synagogue, North Finchley mosque and the Bhaktivedanta Manor Hare Krishna Hindu temple are all within walking distance or commutable from the school site. Local religious leaders provide tours, explanations and demonstrations of religious practices and stories from their religion providing first hand insight into a variety of ways of worshipping and living. Visitors from our diverse community are also invited to meet and talk with the children and answer questions.

Teachers encourage children to consider the similarities between religions as well as appreciating the differences between faiths and remind children about the importance of respect and tolerance. The pupils make links between the school and British values with those found in religions. World views and philosophical ideas are also discussed and debated, with children answering and asking ultimate questions posed by these.

The units are planned with three golden threads from the Barnet Agreed syllabus, starting with belonging, moving to story, celebration and symbols and ending with leaders, teachers and believing.

In addition to the RE curriculum, we have a comprehensive assembly and class performance rota which focuses on religious festivals throughout the year. Children from each class will present information on a festival from the religions represented within the school.

Pupil voice plays a large role at Brookland and pupils feedback each term on their learning in RE during whole school meetings, groups of pupils are also often selected to answer questions about the curriculum and their comments can lead to change or adjustments within planning.

Impact

How do we know how well our children are learning more and remembering more in RE during their time at Brookland?

Work is recorded in individual books transferred up through the school as well as Thinking Books which show class thoughts and reflections on an issue, trip or even philosophical point. Alongside quality assessment for learning in class teachers and pupils evaluate their learning each lesson through the use of green pen comments which reflect on the key skill or content during the lesson. Identified key skills in the planning are deep marked each term and half termly assessments record the attainments of each child in RE. Class teachers provide a written report statement on RE at the end of the year.
